Lt. Rick Hooper from Rawlins Police Department knocks on a classroom door trying to get a response while Hanna Marshal Jeff Neimark looks on.

where students are taught about what can be used in a room if an intruder with a weapon gets in. He says the advanced shows weapons a person can use to defend themselves. Hooper said many victims in the Virginia Tech massacre had been shot in a crouching position, hoping just to not be found. He believes if an intruder does get in, there are steps that can taken to neutralize the intruder. This is what advanced SRP hopes to teach.

"With advanced, we are just trying to give teachers tools for the toolbox, because they are the ones that have to teach the protocol to their students," said Hooper. Neimark was grateful for Hooper's insight and all the law enforcement that came in for the drill. "I really want to thank all the law enforcement agencies that came out to assist. It was a great evacuation drill," said Neimark. "Everybody did everything right."

In case of an intruder getting past security at the front desk, Neimark's words have to be heartening to parents and school officials concerning HEM high school lockdown.
