General Assignment Reporter Position at the Saratoga Sun

You: You love to tell the stories of those around you and know there's a story behind the story. You're community-minded and community-driven. You enjoy talking to people, have a passion for writing and are looking to begin or further a career.

Us: We're the Platte Valley's newspaper. We're one of the state's pioneer publications, established two years before Wyoming was granted statehood. Like you, we're community-minded and community-driven. We take our role in the community of watchdog and the first-draft of history seriously. The Saratoga Sun has won multiple awards from the Wyoming Press Association over the years including several individual awards for articles and column writing, as well as Editorial Excellence.

What we expect: A general assignment reporter will be expected to cover a wide-variety of subjects ranging from high school prep sports to local government meetings, writing feature articles on Valley residents and reporting on the outdoor recreation and tourism of the area. The ideal candidate for this position is familiar with word processing programs such as Microsoft Word or Google Docs.

What we can provide: Previous experience is preferred, training can be provided. We also provide Paid Time Off and 401(k) after one year.

Where you will be working: Nestled between the Snowy Range and Sierra Madre mountains, amenities range from fly fishing and hiking in the summer to ice fishing and snowshoeing in the winter. Saratoga is also home to one of the first microbreweries in Wyoming and has a growing food scene. Finally, there's the natural hot springs, free to the public and open 24/7.

The Details: This is a salaried position with a flexible schedule and pay dependent on experience. If interested in the position, or for more information, please email Joshua Wood at wood.saratogasun@gmail.com.

BLM seeks public input on new plan for recreation management

Blueprint will chart a course for future outdoor activities on America's public lands

WASHINGTON, D.C. – The Bureau of Land Management is welcoming public input on a plan to inform recreation management on America's public lands. The new Blueprint for 21st Century Outdoor Recreation will guide Bureau decisions to proactively meet modern demands for exceptional and unique outdoor experiences, complementing the significant public land investments in President Biden's Investing in America agenda.

"BLM hosted more than 81 million visitors on our public lands last fiscal year – a 40 percent increase since 2012. We are thrilled at this trend, but also recognize that more guests means a need for varied and diverse response strategies," said BLM Director Tracy Stone-Manning. "The Blueprint aims to help BLM meet the growing demand for exceptional recreation experiences on our public lands."

Managing for recreational opportunities is a core tenet of BLM's multiple use mandate and aligns with BLM's mission to sustain the health, diversity and productivity of public lands for the use and enjoyment of present and future generations. The increasing demand for recreational activities on public lands has provided a critical window of opportunity to advance a transformational shift in recreation management. This Blueprint will help BLM prioritize recreation investment and staffing appropriate for current and future needs.

BLM is seeking input from partners and the public, including in-person and virtual recreation Blueprint roundtables hosted by the Foundation for America's Public Lands. Together, BLM and its partners will implement a strategy to guide the agency in providing the resources and experiences that visitors to public lands expect in the 21st century.

The Blueprint is not a formal management plan but rather a strategic document to guide the agency's work. The full text of the Blueprint and associated fact sheet are available on our Recreation Strategy webpage. The Bureau welcomes feedback on how BLM can best implement the Blueprint. To do so, please email blm_recreation_feedback@blm.gov.
